

WHAT IS A SERVICE

The formal Marketing definition of a service describes it as:

“An economic activity offered by one party to another, most commonly employing time-based performances to bring about desired results in recipients themselves, or in objects and other assets for which purchasers have responsibility.”

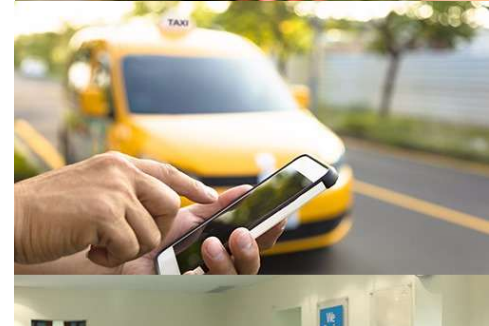

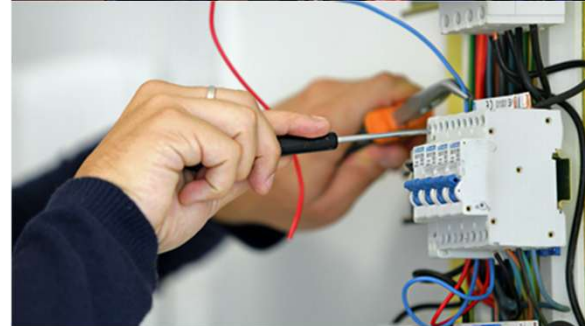

A service, simply put, is simply something that helps someone to do something – Lou Downe

What is a service - a working definition

In economic terms, service occurs when there's a value exchange between parts. One part, the service provider, performs a certain activity that results in some benefit that includes a specific output and involves certain experiences. The other part, the service user, sees value in the output, the experience, or both combined and is willing to pay for it or exchange for something else of equivalent value.

A favor, assistance that a person, or system, performs on the behalf of another.

EXAMPLES

Copyrights: Shamit Shrivastava

What is Service? In Other Terms

Expanding into other aspects of life, the notion of services might overlap with the idea of care, e.g., health care, personal care, or firefighters protecting people; religious services; military protecting a country; community services and public services; and care for citizens, among many others. In many of these cases, no payment is made between parts (provider and user), but the compensation for the service happens through indirect ways, such as public services. In some cases, there's no monetary exchange whatsoever, such as volunteer-based services.

Copyrights: Shamit Shrivastav

There are enormous opportunities in both the public and private service sectors. A survey (2009) showed that, on average, eighty-five percent of businesses thought they provided excellent service, but only eight percent of their customers agreed.

Oliver King, Co-founder and Director, Engine Service Design

Design is becoming more relevant in the commercial world of business as many industries shift to become service-driven organizations.

Copyrights: Shamit Shrivastav

Product Companies expanding to services

WHAT WE DO

We bring together diverse, future-facing industries and communities to co-create a positive world, where one enables the other to Rise.

Copyrights: Shomit Shrivastav

Copyrights: Shamit Shrivastav

A photograph of a Mahindra Finance building at night. The building has a prominent yellow horizontal band across its middle section. On this band, the company name is written in English and Hindi. The upper part of the building features a series of windows, some of which are illuminated from within, showing silhouettes of people. The lower part of the building also has large windows, reflecting the night sky and some interior lights. The overall scene is dark, with the yellow band providing a strong contrast.

Mahindra FINANCE

महिंद्रा फ़ायनांस

महिंद्रा फ़ायनांस

Mahindra

Service Experience

- Services are relationships
- Services are journeys
- Services need to be experienced

These are the three most important aspects of the service experience.

- Great services are usually easy to learn and master.
- Great services are accessible and seamless.
- Good services are well-crystallized, making them easy to use and recognize. They also have the ability to translate into delightful memories.

Good services are -

- Good for the user of the service – it does what they need it to do, in a way that works for them.
- Good for the organization providing it – it's profitable and easy to run
- Good for society as a whole – it does not destroy the world we live in, or negatively affect the society as a whole

As designers, we look at services primarily as human experiences, not just as economic activities.

Copyrights: Shamit Shrivastav